Summary of Public Comment and Agency Response:

The official comment period ended on December 15, 2017. In response to the notice of proposal, the State Parole Board (Board) received comments from Michael C. Woyce, Esq., in regards to proposed new N.J.A.C. 10A:72-14, Internet Access Condition. The comment from Mr. Woyce and the agency response are as follows:

COMMENT: The proposed regulation permits the imposition of absolute Internet prohibitions, as well as granting the Board power to monitor all Internet communications of an offender and requires the disclosure of all passwords used to access information on the Internet. This restriction prohibits benign Internet activity and other Internet communications that pose no risk of harm. The regulation is overly broad and violates offenders' First Amendment protections. The regulation should be less restrictive and more narrowly tailored and the prohibition to all Internet access is greater than necessary to meet any governmental interest.

Offenders' First Amendment rights are further intruded upon by requiring monitoring software. No guidelines are created for the imposition of this software and it is unclear which programs are acceptable and what features may be utilized. As the Division of Parole may not ransack an offender's home, read every piece of mail, and require him or her to write his or her every thought out for review by the Division of Parole, nor can it do so through technological means.

The regulation requires offenders to provide all passwords. This would include passwords to such matters as bank log-in information and access to government benefit programs. The Division of Parole is not entitled to such information.

The regulation violates the Fourth Amendment. The State Parole Board may only conduct a search (using software is a search through technical means) where it has a reasonable articulable suspicion of a violation. The regulation would permit an ongoing search without a reasonable suspicion of wrongdoing.

The procedure to impose Internet prohibitions is defective as the regulation does not permit a hearing, evidentiary or otherwise. The State Supreme Court in J.I. v. New Jersey State Parole Board, 228 N.J. 204 (2017), noted that J.I. was entitled to a reasonable opportunity to challenge the proposed imposition of the severely enhanced Internet restrictions and to a hearing in some form even if not an evidentiary one before the Board. The Court ordered at a minimum that offenders are entitled to provide written submissions and a hearing. The proposed regulation only provides for half of the process demanded by the Court.

The regulation provides for a review no less than one year from the effective date. The language utilized requires no review. The regulation prohibits a review in the first year and only requires a review on an annual basis thereafter, if necessary. The proposed regulation does not make the yearly review automatic, nor does it define when a review would be necessary. An offender should be entitled to a review of any Internet restriction at least every 90 days and for a decision to be rendered and a justification given for any continuation of the restriction.

Therefore, the proposed regulation should not be adopted and significant revisions are necessary to protect the substantial liberty interests affected and to more narrowly tailor the authority of the Division of Parole to impose Internet restrictions. Additionally, guidelines are necessary with regard to searching computers, as well as a process for more frequent reviews of the deprivation of liberty.

RESPONSE: The Board believes that the new subchapter addresses the First Amendment issues referred to by Mr. Woyce by delineating the Internet access condition as a special condition that will only apply on a case-by-case basis. The Division of Parole is required to demonstrate a specific and articulable reason and a clear purpose for the imposition of the Internet access condition. The proposed new subchapter also requires the Division of Parole to demonstrate that the imposition of the Internet access condition will act as an aid to the offender's re-entry effort, will promote the rehabilitation of the offender, is necessary to protect the public, or will reduce recidivism by the offender. Furthermore, under the proposed new subchapter, the prohibition of Internet use can be relaxed with the approval of the District Parole Supervisor or designee. Many courts have upheld conditional bans on Internet use by sex offenders, whereby, the prohibition of Internet use could be relaxed with the approval of the offender's probation/parole officer.

The constitutional rights of a sex offender who is serving a special sentence of community/parole supervision for life are greatly diminished. The Supreme Court of the United States has acknowledged that a state has an overwhelming interest in supervising parolees because parolees are more likely to commit future criminal offenses. A state's interests in reducing recidivism among parolees allow for privacy intrusions that would not otherwise be tolerated under the Fourth Amendment. The Supreme Court of the United States has held that parolees do not have unfettered constitutional rights and that parole conditions that restrict their activities substantially beyond the ordinary restrictions imposed by law on an individual citizen do not violate the Constitution. Moreover, in J.I., supra, referred to by Mr. Woyce, the State Supreme Court held that in lieu of imposing a complete ban on Internet use, the Board had the option of imposing other less restrictive methods of supervision including a condition that required the installation of monitoring software on an offender's computer or device. The Court did not question the validity of such a condition. The installation of monitoring software on an Internet capable device(s) serves to ensure that an offender uses his or her electronic device(s) for authorized purposes only, thereby, furthering the State's interest in rehabilitation. It also allows the Board to determine if an offender is using these devices in a manner that could trigger re-offense, as well as whether the offender is re-offending. Thus, the condition serves the interest of protecting the public.

The new subchapter provides for the disclosure of all passwords used by an offender to access any data, information, image, program signal, or file on the computer/device. The Board believes that the disclosure would fall under a less restrictive method of supervision, is legally permissible, and is necessary to monitor an offender's computer/device activity. Mr. Woyce maintains that the requirement is overbroad because it would include disclosure of passwords related to activities, such as banking and government benefit programs. The purpose of the disclosure requirement is to permit a parole officer to search a computer/device to determine whether the offender is engaging in inappropriate activity. The Board concurs that there would seemingly be no purpose or reason for a parole officer to conduct a search of the computer/device related to matters such as banking or government benefit programs. However, a parole officer must have access to the computer/device and to personal e-mail addresses that could contain evidence of inappropriate activity. The Board has, therefore, elected to change proposed N.J.A.C. 10A:72-14.1(c)1vi. As changed, an offender is required to disclose all usernames and passwords related to the accessing of any computer/device, e-mail, and approved social networking service or chat room. Additionally, an offender will be required to disclose any other username(s) and password(s) utilized to access any data, information, image, program signal, or file as deemed necessary by a parole officer to ensure the offender's compliance with the conditions of supervision. The Board has included reference to username(s) as such may be an identification requirement in order to access a computer/device or any of the aforementioned items.

Mr. Woyce asserts that under J.I., supra, an offender is entitled to an in-person hearing before the Board prior to the imposition of the Internet access condition. In J.I., the State Supreme Court reversed a condition imposed by the Board barring J.I. from accessing the Internet. The Court remanded the matter to the Board for the purpose of providing J.I. or his counsel the opportunity to challenge the condition at a hearing. Nowhere in the Court's opinion did the Court hold that all offenders serving a special sentence of community/parole supervision for life must be afforded a hearing to challenge a special condition that places restrictions on Internet use. Although the Court required a process to safeguard against arbitrary government action, the Court stated it will not mandate a regime that makes it impractical to impose an Internet restriction to protect the public or rehabilitate an offender. The Court determined that the balance of interests weighs in favor of giving a supervised offender the opportunity to respond in a meaningful way to a near total or absolute Internet ban and that due process will be satisfied by allowing an offender the opportunity to respond by letter with supporting attachments, such as certifications or affidavits. The Board believes that the proposed new subchapter is in accordance with the Court's opinion and, therefore, a hearing is not required to be included in the proposed regulation.

Mr. Woyce claims that the annual review by the District Parole Supervisor is discretionary and not mandatory and that an offender should be entitled to a more frequent review of the Internet access condition. The proposed new rule uses the term "shall" and, therefore, the review is mandatory and not discretionary. However, to clarify the proposed new rule and to address Mr. Woyce's concern regarding when a review may be necessary, the Board has elected to change N.J.A.C. 10A:72-14.4(a). The Board has deleted the phrase "no less than" and deleted the phrase "if necessary." Thus, the first annual review is to be conducted one year from the effective date of the condition and on an annual basis thereafter (this, of course, assumes that the condition is continued at an annual review). The Board also believes, based on J.I., supra, that an annual review is a reasonable time period for an assessment as to whether an Internet access condition is to be continued.

Except for the modifications to N.J.A.C. 10A:72-14.1(c)1(vi) and 14.4(a), the Board elected to adopt new N.J.A.C. 10A:72-14 as proposed.
