My favorite activity is the immersion in experiencing the changes a new season brings. On a cool, crisp morning I find myself engaged using the senses to experience the fall season. I enjoy walking around the local park, or even a farm to see creamy white stalks of maize, and various hues of pumpkins being picked. Ahh, the crunch of the sour Granny Smith Apple, and the added sweetness of the caramel dip. The smell of cider in the air, and seeing the red, orange, and yellow leaves of the foliage. Experiencing a change of season, moving from one stage to another, all the while staying in touch with the world around us.

Walking in the woods, in the solitude and coolness of mornings, taking in the beauty of the season and its beautiful colors, with its own unique earthy scent, hearing the crunching of leaves under your feet, feeling the cool air on your face and if you close your eyes, you may even taste the warmth of pumpkin flavored coffee.
