Remnants of a furnace

Long Pond Ironworks State Park houses the remnants of a once thriving ironworking community. A German iron master named Peter Hasenclever founded the community in 1766. The forges and furnaces were shut down in 1882, and it became a State Park over 100 years later in 1987.