

New Jersey Department of Health Vaccine Preventable Disease Program

National Immunization Awareness Month (NIAM) is an annual observance to raise awareness about the important role vaccines play in preventing serious, sometimes deadly diseases. Each year, the Department encourages public health agencies and healthcare providers to host special events to promote vaccination and to celebrate the critical role vaccination plays in protecting individuals, communities, and public health.

This document contains a list of events that are being conducted throughout the state to celebrate National Immunization Awareness Month. Click the county below to find events taking place in your community.
