Last man standing

Soldier from 114th Infantry only recipient of EIB from field of 40 Soldiers

By Sgt. Landis Andrews,
444th MPAD

To call Staff Sgt. Steven Nestore an Army of One would be trite, as his prior service in the Marines means he is not purely Army Strong.

But, during the Expert Infantry Badge competition, Nestore definitely did “Be all that he could be”, as he emerged as the only recipient of the EIB at Ft. AP Hill, Va., from a pool of more than 40 hopefuls.

Nestore could hardly take a bite of his breakfast without having to pause and shake hands with soldiers eager to congratulate him on his accomplishment. It was as though he had achieved celebrity status in that moment.

However, like a good NCO, while everyone’s eyes were on the sniper section leader, his thoughts were with his troops.

“I can’t say it feels good to be the only winner because guys in my section didn’t make it,” he said. “I know they’re good enough – that’s why they’re in my section. But at least now they can have the confidence in me and look to me when they get ready to come back next year.”

During the EIB competition, candidates were tested on physical fitness, day and night-time land navigation and a series of high-intensity lanes that raised the pressure on common soldier tasks such as administering field aid, doing functions check on weapons, employing grenades and much more. When those tasks were finished, there was only two soldiers left standing for the 12-mile ruck march. You know the rest.

“Ruck marches are easy for me,” the newly pinned recipient said. “They are physically and mentally draining, but if you do enough of them you know the strategy to be successful.”

“Once I made it through the traffic control point lane I knew I was going to get this badge,” said Nestore.

Part of the TCP lane was to properly create a range card – a class taught by Staff Sgt. Adea Fonseca.

Fonseca knows a thing or two about distinguishing himself from the pack. When Fonseca earned his EIB, he was one of 12 candidates to middle of class and I told him to stand by and I’ll answer his question after class.”

“When it ended, I said if there are no questions, everyone is dismissed. Everyone took off – everyone except for Staff Sgt. Nestore,” said Fonseca. “He stayed after and made sure he got his questions answered.”

“That’s the kind of focus and dedication it takes to earn the EIB,” concluded Fonseca.

Sgt. Erick Recinos, one of last year’s recipients, also noted the winner’s focus.

“The graders see the candidates perform and they can tell who is studying and who is taking it seriously,” said Recinos, a Newark, N.J. native. “Nestore was that guy.”

Staff Sgt. John McDonnell, a grader in the competition said he knows why the 30 year-old was successful.

“The guys that approach the competition and the lanes with a plan and execute that plan are the guys wearing the badge,” said McDonnell. “That is why Nestore is wearing an EIB.”

finish the competition from a field of more than 400 soldiers. With that in mind, he said the day he arrived to Ft. AP Hill, he knew Nestore had what it takes to be successful.

“I taught the class on range cards,” Fonseca said. “Nestore had a question in the
