Suicide prevention more than a month-long campaign

By Jonathan Stock, Air Force Surgeon General Public Affairs

WASHINGTON (AFNS) -- All Airmen have a responsibility that lasts much longer than a one-month campaign. This responsibility extends beyond ourselves and includes our work environment, our families, friends, fellow Airmen and our communities.

While Suicide Prevention Month is observed across the United States in September, the month-long event is a reminder of everyone's 24/7, 365-day responsibility to be a true Wingman. That means knowing our fellow Airmen, family members, coworkers and what is happening in their lives, as well as being willing and able to support them when they are facing challenges that test their resilience.

The Air Force has undertaken several initiatives to improve resilience for individuals and our communities. These efforts can be found under the umbrella of Comprehensive Airmen Fitness, which focuses on maintaining a balanced and healthy lifestyle across physical, mental, social and spiritual domains. Individuals practicing comprehensive fitness are more likely to seek help when needed and be able to identify risk factors and warning signs when an individual is off balance.

"Prevention begins with each individual working to strengthen and maintain their overall well-being across all CAF domains, as well as being able to identify when there's need for help. A good Wingman offers help knowing what resources are available, and follows up to stand by their side throughout a challenge," said Lt. Col. Kathleen Crimmins, Air Force Suicide Prevention manager. "Assisting Airmen to get help... whether peer or professional, is what a Wingman does."

A number of resources are available to include the Air Force Suicide Prevention website, the Airman's Guide for Assisting Personnel in Distress, the Military Crisis Line by calling 1-800-273-8255, press 1, text 838255, or go online to chat at www.militarycrisisline.net, with access to peer counselors in person and through online chats and text messaging.

You can also find help by contacting your local agencies who make up the installation Integrated Delivery System.

In addition to the crisis phone line, help is also available through the Vets4Warriors peer support chat line at 855-838-8255 or online at www.vets4warriors.com. This line will connect an individual with veteran peers who understand the unique challenges of military life and assist with problem solving and resolution.

Family members, retirees, and veterans can also use these resources for themselves if they feel the need to speak with someone.

According to Crimmins, Air Force mental health clinics reported an increase in the number of visits annually over the last few years which are positive results of the Air Force's effort to remove the perceived stigma of seeking help. Leaders at all levels must continue to promote and encourage individuals to seek support agencies and clinician services as a normal step in maintaining a good work and life balance.

Early resolution of stress helps Airmen maintain a balanced lifestyle, which in turn allows them to withstand, recover and grow in the face of adversity.

"We can all make a difference by helping our Wingmen understand they are not alone," said Crimmins. "Sharing our stories and highlighting our own personal resilience and perseverance will let others know their Air Force family is behind them and those needing help are not alone."

Feedback welcome on new Performance Triad app

From Army News Service

Important information and helpful links on sleep, activity and nutrition -- the three components of Performance Triad -- are now available as an app that can be downloaded to any smartphone.

While the Performance Triad version 1.0 is useful in its current form, future versions will contain interactive features, according to Lt. Col. Myong S. Woo, Health Informatics officer, technical lead for Performance Triad.

The Army Office of the Surgeon General would like to receive feedback from Soldiers, Army civilians and family members about exactly what they would like the app to feature, she said, as app developers are meeting next month to discuss future versions.

Commanders have already expressed interest in an interactive dashboard feature that would allow them to provide guidance to their troops or answer any questions or concerns they might have, she said, adding that Soldiers would have complete control of their confidentiality.

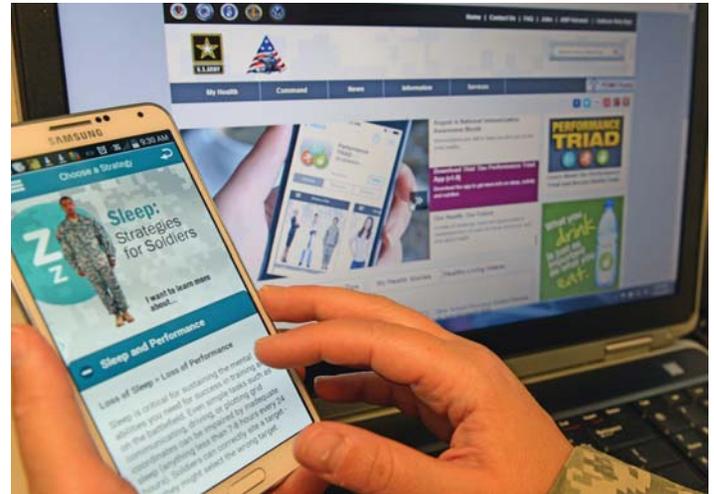

Perhaps Soldiers would like a daily inspirational message or tips on managing work, while getting the proper amount of sleep, or a nutritional tip of the day. Other possibilities, she said, include entering steps taken per day and hours of sleep or food eaten to track sleep wellness or calories.

Feedback like this will help guide future app development, Woo said, noting that "it's now very much a work in progress."

Users can visit their app store for this free app for iPhone, Android or Windows. Search for "Performance Triad" and download the app to the smartphone.

Once the app is downloaded, avatars of a Soldier, Army civilian, family member and retiree will be displayed. Users should click on their avatar, which will open up content most applicable to them, she said.

Content in the app is organized by the three sleep, activity and nutrition categories. Within each category are such things as frequently asked questions and links to helpful sites like Army wellness centers, the Human Performance Resource Center and Operation Supplement Safety.

After reviewing the content users should click on "review" to provide feedback, she said, adding that it would be excellent if squad leaders and other leaders can promote the app to their Soldiers and their own family members.

The app supports the Army's Ready and Resilient Campaign by giving Soldiers and family members the tools they need to maintain peak performance, Woo concluded, adding that August is Performance Triad month, and it's also the one-year anniversary when the first Performance Triad pilot course started.

The Army Public Health Command, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, U.S. Army Combined Arms Support Command and U.S. Army Sustainment Center of Excellence also participated in the app's development and will participate in future revisions, Woo said.

Honor Guard pays final tribute to military service

To many, Sgt. Asim Williams may have one of the most depressing jobs in the New Jersey.

The 36-year-old Trenton native is the north area supervisor for the state's Honor Guard program. It's this Army National Guardsmen's job to attend the funerals and pay the last respects to departed military members and veterans.

"People often ask me, 'how can you attend a funeral everyday?'" he said. "I don't think about it like that, I see it as a way to honor our veterans."

Williams has been involved with the Honor Guard since 2007, and took on a full time position in 2008.

The state's Honor Guard program performs approximately 4,000 funerals per year, according to Spc. Kerry Evans, the state's program coordinator. He said that in January of this year, the Honor Guard surpassed 25,000 funerals since it's inception in 2005.

Evans said every veteran is entitled to a military color guard, whether they've served in wartime or peace. The level of honors varies depending on the person's service, but at a bare minimum will consist of folding the American Flag, presenting it to the family, along with the playing of Taps.

"The veteran has earned this and deserves it," he said. "It really is an honor to stand up there for the veteran who is no longer with us."

For Evans, the funeral honors represent a promise made to the deceased when they enlisted. He said it also represents the keeping of that promise to the current Soldiers that their service and sacrifice will not be forgotten.

"It tells that current soldier that their service was very important, it mattered and when the day comes, we'll render them the same honors," he said.

And while the vast majority of the funeral honors rendered throughout the years are for elderly veterans who served decades ago, the Honor Guard has also been present to formally honor New Jersey's fallen who served in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Williams recalls being present for one of the Jersey Guard's own, Staff Sgt. Jorge Oliveira, who was killed in action Oct. 19, 2011 as a member of the provisional reconstruction team in Afghanistan.

"That's the worst part - to hand off the flag to a wife or a mother who's saying their son went too fast, it wasn't his time to go," Williams said. "It gets you shaken up, but you still do your duty and try to honor that veteran the best you can."

Evans said the Honor Guard Soldiers must walk a fine line between keeping an emotional distance from the subject, while ensuring they give it their full attention and due respect. It's something he calls "presence."

"Our soldiers need to be present," he said. "You can't totally distance yourself because when you are doing this, it's the most important thing you are doing that day."

He stressed the importance of communication amongst the Soldiers of the Honor Guard, as well as the time-honored tradition of checking your buddy. It's a lesson Soldiers can apply outside of the Honor Guard.

"Don't be afraid to ask the question: 'How are you doing? This was a tough one today... how are you doing with that?'" he said.

Williams said while the job can be tough at times, it's extremely rewarding.

"I love my job, it makes me feel good to be a Soldier and give our veterans their proper dignified send-off," he said.

More than 200 Soldiers and approximately 11 veterans participate in New Jersey's Honor Guard, but Evans said they are always looking for more.

The program is open to all New Jersey National Guard members, of all ranks, in an active or drilling status. Soldiers interested in becoming members of the program must be in good standing with their unit - meaning they meet the height, weight and physical fitness standards.

Honor Guard Soldiers receive formal training in their duties and receive one day's pay at their current rank for performing honors duties. Soldiers will also receive one retirement point for each day's participation, and after 30 missions are eligible for the New Jersey Honor Guard Ribbon.

Soldiers interested in becoming part of the program should contact Evans at 609-530-6758 or email him at kerry.e.evans4.mil@mail.mil.
