This Week In Military History

By Tech. Sgt. Mark Olsen, NJDMAVA/PA

On Nov. 8, 1942, the Allies invaded French North Africa.

Operation Torch (it was originally called Operation Gymnast) was the United States and Britain's opening move in taking the fight against the Axis powers.

Instead of attacking Fortress Europe directly (the Allied invasion of Dieppe – Operation Jubilee – had been an utter disaster the likes not seen since Dunkirk), the Allies planned a combined invasion of Morocco and Algeria, both French possessions and under control of Régime de Vichy (Nazi Germany had installed a puppet French government that was located in Vichy hence the name), in North Africa. These locations held key ports used by the Axis in their desert campaign against the British. Eliminating that control was seen as the first step toward destroying the Axis threat in North Africa.

General Dwight Eisenhower was given command of the operation with the following goals (1) establish secure bases for continued air, ground and sea operations; (2) exploit those footholds and extend offensive operations against Axis forces and finally (3) destroy all Axis forces opposing the British forces in the Western Desert and establish bases for air and sea operations against the Axis in the European continent. Politically the invasion's purpose was to reduce the pressure of German forces on the Russian troops and to show Stalin that the United States and Britain were really part of the war effort.

The Allies planned a series of amphibious landings to simultaneously seize the key ports and airports of Morocco and Algeria, specifically targeting Casablanca, Oran and Algiers. The Allies believed that the Vichy French forces would not fight; this was based on information supplied by the American Consul in Algiers.

The operation began in the early hours of Nov. 8. In Casablanca the landings occurred at three points: Safi, Fedala, and Mehdiya-Port Lyautey. Despite heavy resistance by Vichy forces, all capitulated by the end of the day. By the 10th, the Americans had surrounded Casablanca, which surrendered an hour before the final assault.

At Oran there was stubborn resistance by the Vichy forces, however heavy fire from British Naval forces brought about their surrender on the 9th. In Algiers, the invasion was led by the American 34th Infantry with the belief that the French would react more favorably to an American landing than a British one. Some of the units, which were split between three beaches, went to the wrong beaches, but this didn't matter since there was practically no French opposition. In one instance, the French commander openly welcomed the Allies.

Torch saw the first major airborne assault carried out by the United States. The 509th Parachute Infantry Battalion flew all the way from Britain intending to drop near Oran and capture airfields at Tafarquay and Youk-Les-Bains. The drop was marked by navigational and communication problems. Coupled with the extreme range, several aircraft were forced to land in the desert. Nevertheless, both airports were captured.

"On November 10th, Admiral Darlan (Admiral François Darlan was in command of the Vichy forces) broadcast an order calling on all French forces in North Africa to cease resistance, and by 0700 hours the following morning, hostilities finally ceased on the Front of the Western Task Force," General Eisenhower stated in his after action report.

Operation Torch was a learning process for both the Americans and the British. Intelligence suggested that Vichy forces would not put up a fight; they did. Mistakes were also made during the amphibious and airborne landings. All these lessons-learned were effectively applied to future war efforts. Operation Torch led to the eventual defeat of Axis forces in North Africa on May 13, 1943, which was followed by the invasions of Sicily July 9, 1943 and Normandy – D-Day – on June 6, 1944.

Leadership Visits Deployed Airmen

By Senior Airman Robbie Finley, 108th ARW Public Affairs

Maj. Gen. Glenn K. Rieth, the Adjutant General of New Jersey, Brig. Gen. Lawrence J. Thomas III, Commander, N.J. Air National Guard; Col. Ron Alfors, the chief of staff for the NJNG's Joint Force Headquarters, and Col. Michael L. Cunniff, the 108th ARW commander, flew to Incirlik on one of the 108th's KC-135E Stratotankers Oct. 17. The relatively long flight and difference in time had them arriving in the late morning of Oct. 18.

The next day, the 90th EARS crew members took the distinguished visitors up on an aerial refueling of a C-17 Globemaster III.

"No matter how many times you see an aerial refueling, it is still amazing," General Rieth said.

Thursday, Oct. 20, saw an end to the trip as the command team returned on a KC-135, confident that the Citizen Airmen from New Jersey were doing their best to help wherever and whenever they can.

Veterans Day, November 11

On Saturday, November 11, we honor the men and women who have served America with Veterans Day. Unlike Memorial Day, which honors those who have died in wartime, Veterans Day honors all those who have served, in times of peace as well as in war.

Veterans Day is observed on November 11. The holiday was originally called Armistice Day, and it commemorated the end of World War I on November 11, 1918. Fighting stopped at 11 a.m., the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month.

In 1919, on the first anniversary of the World War I armistice (truce), President Woodrow Wilson issued a proclamation expressing pride in the heroism of those who had died during the war. Business stopped for two minutes starting at 11 a.m., and it later became customary to observe two minutes of silence from 11 a.m. Many states made Armistice Day a state holiday in the 1920s and 1930s, and in 1938 the Congress of the United States declared it a federal holiday.

In 1954 the name of the holiday was changed from Armistice Day to Veterans Day to honor those who had served in World War II (1939-1945) and the Korean War (1950-1953). Today, the holiday honors all veterans. In 1968 Congress changed the date of the holiday to the fourth Monday in October to give Americans a three-day weekend. But because of the significance of November 11 to many people, the traditional date was restored by law in 1978.

The Brig. Gen. William C. Doyle Veterans Memorial Cemetery annual Veterans Day ceremony will be held on the chapel committal plaza on Nov. 11, at 11 a.m. The Veterans Cemetery Advisory Council will also hold a flag retirement ceremony. The Doyle cemetery is located at 350 Province line Road, Wrightstown, N.J. You can

"We expect Americans will see our decorated heroes unite in spirit at ceremonies, in parades and elsewhere as a compelling symbol of courage and sacrifice on Veterans Day, the day we set aside to thank those who served and safeguarded our national security."

honor the Australian and New Zealand Army Corps (ANZAC) on April 25. ANZAC Day sees veterans wearing their military decorations whatever they are doing on that day. Nicholson said he hopes a U. S. tradition will ensue to emulate this pride in being a veteran and in honoring our veterans.

More information is available at <http://www.va.gov/veteranspride/> where veterans also can obtain information about how to replace mislaid medals and learn how to confirm the decorations to which they are entitled.

General George Smith Patton Jr. (Nov. 11, 1885 – Dec. 21, 1945) served in the Mexican Expedition, World War I and World War II. He was an advocate of armored warfare and commanded major units in the North Africa, Sicily and European campaigns. Patton was known also by the nickname "Old Blood and Guts"; a name given to him after a reporter misquoted his statement that it takes blood and brains to win a war. His most famous quote is: No sonofabitch ever won a war by dying for his country; he won the war by making the other dumb sonofabitch die for his country.
