Program Summary

Brick-and-mortar law libraries aren’t the only legal institutions that have changed dramatically in the face of new technologies. This presentation will start with a whirlwind tour of traditional search-and-seizure concepts, and then turn to technology-driven privacy issues that police, prosecutors, legislators, and judges are only just beginning to grapple with. We are facing a brave new world of search-and-seizure litigation. Are you ready? This fast-paced presentation will culminate with an interactive exercise involving a fact pattern that raises legal and policy issues that challenge our present understanding of the right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures. Whether you consider yourself to be a Fourth Amendment expert or a rank novice, this presentation will make you think twice about what it means to have a “reasonable expectation of privacy” in a world filled with eye-in-the-sky “drones,” smartphone cameras, automated license plate readers, and social media apps. And are “telephonic warrants” really a panacea? You probably won’t find the answer to these questions through a LEXIS or WestLaw key word search. Some issues still need to be researched in the library. Join us there for a spirited conversation on where the Fourth Amendment may be heading.
