Program Summary

Attorneys have an ethical obligation to represent their clients zealously. However, a fine line exists between acting as a zealous advocate and engaging in “Over-the-Line” litigation. This program will help attorneys identify where the “line” is and what to do when one’s adversary is litigating from the other side of it. The program will provide effective strategies to combat overly aggressive litigators and explore the ethical limitations on how far an attorney can go in terms of providing her or his client with zealous representation.

Who Should Attend?

This presentation is open to all government attorneys, space allowing.
