Program Summary

In the age of social media, there is immediate access to the news from anywhere in the world. While instant access has its benefits, it also causes a number of ethical complications for those who work in the legal profession, including the potential effects of immediate dissemination of pretrial statements. Pretrial statements, whether verbal or by formal press release, are a necessary part of prosecutors' jobs. Law enforcement is legally required to provide basic information to the public, both in routine cases and in cases with substantial public importance. In some instances, providing public information can lead to citizens assisting detectives in solving cases. However, failure to work properly with the media can result in an inaccurate and unnecessarily negative narrative.

This course will cover the Rules of Professional Conduct as they relate to press releases, social media, and press conferences. The presenters will examine the ethical considerations that attach to all pretrial statements made to or through the media by prosecutors and police officers and provide a framework for analyzing which statements can be released based upon the stage of the case. The presenters will also discuss applicable rules, directives and executive orders, present real-life examples of ethics mishaps, and provide tools to assist prosecutors in avoiding future mistakes.
