Cumberland County Prosecutor's Office
Room 235
115 Vine Street, Bridgeton, NJ

Program Summary

In State v. Nyema, 249 N.J. 509 (2022), the Supreme Court addressed the requirement of specific and articulable facts, taken together with rational inferences, that give rise to reasonable suspicion of criminal activity to justify an investigative stop. This program will examine the Nyema holding in detail, particularly as it relates to the specificity of the information required and the types of considerations that may not be used to support reasonable suspicion. The instructors will discuss the surrounding case law in relation to motion practice that challenges the validity of investigative stops and the evidence resulting from those stops.
